Chapter 310: The Vision of Ascension

With the creation of countless realms, divine tools, and divine creatures, Sung Jin-Woo's ultimate purpose was clear: to spread his power across the multiverse, ensuring that divinity permeated every corner of existence. It was not a mere conquest for dominance or a hunger for more power, but rather a grand, profound vision to empower all life.

His creation of worlds was not just about expanding the boundaries of the realms, but about establishing a network of divine influence that would gradually amplify the strength of every living being within it. This was a long-term plan that would slowly bring about a new age of evolution across the multiverse—a future where even the weakest being could stand against the might of the outer multiverse entities.

The Purpose of His Creations

Each realm Sung Jin-Woo created, each divine tool, and every divine creature he summoned was a piece of a larger puzzle. His creations were not merely for show or for war; they were vehicles of change, conduits of power that would infuse the very fabric of reality with divine energy. With every creature he summoned, every flower he planted, and every divine being he nurtured, he wove the essence of divinity into the hearts of the multiverse's inhabitants.

1. Divine Tools and Their Role

The divine tools, from the Cups of Reincarnation to the Absolute Hourglass, were more than just weapons and artifacts; they were focal points of divine energy. They served as conduits to enhance the power of their wielders, allowing them to rise above their limitations. Sung Jin-Woo created these tools to empower those who were worthy, enabling them to access latent divine potential.

2. Divine Creatures as Catalysts for Growth

The divine creatures were not just guardians or symbols of power; they were living manifestations of evolution. Each divine fauna and flora Sung Jin-Woo crafted was a biological marvel—designed to help nurture and heal, but also to challenge the living beings of the realms to grow stronger. The Aetheral Seraphs, Phoenixes of Eternity, and Celestial Wolves all played key roles in shaping the strength and resilience of their realms. They were created to guide the worthy and challenge the weak, providing the perfect balance between growth, survival, and ascension.

3. New Realms as Foundations for Ascension

The new realms Sung Jin-Woo crafted were not meant to merely house life but were divine incubators—places where the weak could evolve, and the strong could ascend. Each realm, from the serene Realm of Eternity to the hostile Realm of the Abyss, was designed with a purpose: to test, strengthen, and ultimately ascend all forms of life. Through trials and tribulations, beings in these realms would grow more powerful, until they were capable of confronting the most dangerous threats in the multiverse.

The Vision for the Multiverse’s Future

Sung Jin-Woo’s grand vision was simple yet far-reaching. He dreamed of a multiverse where every living being, regardless of origin or race, could possess immense divine power—power strong enough to resist the overwhelming forces of outer entities that sought to invade or destroy their worlds.

Empowerment through Unity

The ultimate goal of his creations was to break down the barriers that separated the divine from the mortal. Through the divine beings and realms, Sung Jin-Woo sought to teach that divinity was not an exclusive right of gods, but a power that could be shared with every soul in existence.

His vision was one of unity and shared strength—where beings across the multiverse would rise together, empowered by the divine energy he spread. He foresaw a time when the weakest creature could stand alongside the most powerful gods, ready to confront the outer multiverse entities—beings that existed beyond the realms, threats so immense that only the collective strength of the multiverse could withstand them.

A Legacy of Strength and Peace

Sung Jin-Woo envisioned a world where, when the time came, every being would be able to rise in defense of existence itself. In his mind, this empowerment wasn’t about war or destruction—it was about creating a future where beings of all kinds could live in harmony, guided by strength, protected by divinity, and capable of defending themselves against any threat, no matter how great.

He did not want to be the only Absolute; rather, he sought to create a multiverse of Absolutes, where each being was a reflection of the divine energy he had spread.

The Road Ahead

As Sung Jin-Woo stood at the pinnacle of power, surrounded by his divine creations and vast realms, his work was far from over. The foundation had been set, but the true challenge was in ensuring that the balance was maintained and that the power he had spread would be properly harnessed. He continued to watch over his creations, ensuring they would grow into something greater than the sum of their parts, ready for whatever challenges the outer multiverse would throw at them.

His vision was clear, and it would continue to unfold across the ages. One day, the day he had long foreseen, every being in the multiverse would stand as equals, empowered by the divine, ready to protect their worlds, and capable of facing the threats of the cosmos.

This was the ultimate legacy of Sung Jin-Woo, The Absolute One, and the gift he would give to every living being across all realms.
